1. Although the harbor of Ustka (Stolpmuende) has not been officially closed to foreign ships, no foreign ships have called at the port for a long time, and no coal has been brought into the harbor for export. Furthermore, small Soviet ships have been calling at the port very seldom. The controls in the town and port have increased, namely: WOP sentries check the new arrivals at the station and the militia checks the pedestrians on the street. [redacted] it is not difficult for the militia to recognize a new arrival because the town of Ustka is very small.

2. Three Soviet sub-chasers, [redacted] were anchored in the entrance to the harbor on 15 October 1953. These ships were armed with four large caliber guns, two located on the foredeck and two on the poop; multiple barrel antiaircraft guns; at least two torpedo launchers; and several mines. [redacted] the size of the large caliber guns to those guns possessed by a field artillery regiment. The ships were anchored in the entrance for only a few hours and no one on board the ships came into the harbor. There are no naval vessels in the harbor of Ustka.
